veterans, and addressing of accessibility concerns for Census’s new headquarters, which opened in the fall, 2006. Throughout 2007 Stephen served as the Chief of Recruitment at the Bureau of Labor Statistics, but his passion for the Federal disability community led to his recent return to the US Census Bureau as DPM in January 2008.

Anne C. Sommers is Policy Counsel of the American Association of People with Disabilities (AAPD), a national non-profit, non-partisan membership organization of people with disabilities, their family members and supporters that was founded in 1995. AAPD pursues its mission of political and economic empowerment of all people with disabilities through public policy advocacy and programs fostering leadership development, youth mentoring and career exploration, voting and civic participation, and member benefits. With more than 100,000 members, AAPD is the largest cross-disability membership organization in the U.S.

Prior to joining AAPD full-time, Sommers worked with AAPD on a disability rights project for the national American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) and prior to that, law clerked for Andrew Imparato, AAPD’s President and Chief Executive Officer. Sommers graduated from the William and Mary School of Law in Williamsburg, Virginia in 2006. Prior to pursuing her legal career, Sommers worked for three years in marketing and copywriting in the health insurance industry and before that as a free-lance journalist for the Richmond Times-Dispatch. Sommers graduated summa cum laude and received her Bachelor’s of Science degree from Virginia Tech University, where she was the Opinions Editor of the university’s award-winning student newspaper.

Sommers’ commitment to disability advocacy is informed by her own experience with physical disability and auto-immunity. Sommers’ co-authored op-eds have been featured in the Washington Post, The Washington Examiner, and Newsday, and a paper she authored regarding wrongful life litigation earned her the distinction of Benjamin Rush Health Law Scholar in 2005.
Christine M. Griffin was sworn in on January 3, 2006, as a Commissioner of the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC). She was nominated by President George W. Bush and unanimously confirmed by the U.S. Senate. As one of five members of the Commission, Ms. Griffin participates with other Commissioners on all matters which come before it, including the development and approval of enforcement policies, authorization of litigation, and issuance of Commissioners’ charges of discrimination.

Ms. Griffin's work experience in labor and employment law includes positions in both the public and private sectors. Most recently, Ms. Griffin served as the Executive Director of the Disability Law Center in Boston from 1996 to 2005, providing leadership and conducting overall management.

Prior to that, Ms. Griffin served from 1995 to 1996 as an Attorney Advisor to the former Vice Chair of the EEOC, Paul M. Igasaki, advising him on legal matters and policy issues. Ms. Griffin's other federal work experience includes serving in the U.S. Attorney's Office in Boston, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, and the U.S. Army.

Ms. Griffin has served on many boards and task forces, including the national Social Security Administration Ticket to Work Advisory Panel, the Massachusetts Developmental Disabilities Council, and the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education.

Susanne M. Bruyère is the Director of the Employment and Disability Institute and the Associate Dean of Outreach at Cornell University in the School of Industrial and Labor Relations - Extension Division.

She has been a Project Director and a Co-Principal Investigator of numerous research efforts focused on technology and disability nondiscrimination funded by the National Institute on Disability and Rehabilitation Research (NIDRR), U.S. Department of Education. One has been focused on human resource (HR) practices, the employment process, and information technology (IT) accessibility in the workplace.

Stephen M. King began his Federal career in 1998 as a Statistician with the U.S. Census Bureau. While serving as a Statistician, he assumed responsibilities as a collateral duty recruiter. In 2000, he was selected to recruit for the Workforce Recruitment Program, a Federal recruitment initiative aimed at students with disabilities.

In 2001, Stephen joined the Recruitment and Diversity Branch of the Census Bureau's Human Resources Division. In this capacity, he was instrumental in developing an effective recruiter training program, which for the first time addressed disability related initiatives and concerns. Additionally, Stephen redesigned recruiter manuals, assisted in the creation of marketing materials, including media targeting the Hispanic and disability communities, and designed and implemented changes to the on-campus student interview process.

In 2003, he was selected to be the Census Bureau’s first Disability Program Manager (DPM). As the DPM, Steve was instrumental in the agency’s advances in the representation of persons with disabilities, including those with targeted disabilities, the increased awareness and use of hiring authorities targeting persons with disabilities and...
